Call for TotalEnergies to end its complicity in Myanmar military's atrocity crimes

Dear Mr. Pouyanné,

We call your attention to the campaign, "TOTALENERGIES - stop being an accessory to Min Aung Hlaing & the Myanmar military's murder campaign!" which has amassed over 224,268 signatures and been endorsed by 789 international civil society organisations and international labour and student unions.¹ Collectively, we call on TotalEnergies to end its complicity in the Myanmar military junta's atrocity crimes by ensuring all payments to Myanmar be placed in a protected account until a democratically elected government is in place.

Monthly payments from TotalEnergies' Yadana gas project are among the junta's largest sources of foreign revenue, reaching over USD 400 million per year. By making and facilitating payments to accounts controlled by a criminal junta that is not recognised by the international communities as the government of Myanmar, TotalEnergies is in breach of Myanmar law, and its human rights obligations.

TotalEnergies (at that time, Total) entered Myanmar in 1992, shortly after the 1988 protests and crackdowns in which the Myanmar military killed thousands of civilian protesters and detained political opponents. Total profited from Myanmar gas while the military misappropriated billions of dollars funnelled by Total through offshore trust corporations to Singapore bank accounts, 99% of which were never recorded in the Myanmar state budget.^{2 3}

TotalEnergies has updated its name, but not its behavior. As of 1 February 2021, it is again providing to the Myanmar military junta the funds and means to buy weapons, knowing the junta will use them against civilians, particularly in ethnic nationalities' areas where civil war has been fought for decades.

Since the failed coup in February 2021, the junta has killed over 1,286 civilians, including 69 children. It has unlawfully detained over 10,000 citizens, including children taken in place of their parents. It has sentenced 65 people to death, including 2 children.⁴ It has used shameful displays of violence, forced disappearances and airstrikes on villages and towns to instill fear in the population. This includes the targeting of civil society activists involved in the Extractive Industries Transparency Initiative (EITI) in Myanmar.⁵ We acknowledge TotalEnergies participation in the EITI and its important role on the global board of the EITI.

Meanwhile, TotalEnergies has misrepresented its relationship with Myanmar, disregarded the Myanmar people's voices and made misleading statements about "humanitarian dilemmas."⁶

We wish to address your statement of 4 April in Le Journal du Dimanche justifying the actions of TotalEnergies, all of which fail to consider the humanitarian implications of payments that make TotalEnergies complicit in the junta's atrocity crimes.⁶

- 1) The junta would not cut gas supplies - undermining Myanmar energy security if TotalEnergies payments were diverted to an escrow account. Halting production would hamper the junta's efforts to assert control in Myanmar and force Thailand, its vital ally, to incur the costs of importing LNG. Our call to TotalEnergies is not to stop gas production, only to divert revenues to accounts inaccessible to the junta.
- 2) TotalEnergies' statements on Thai energy security are either recklessly ill-informed or knowingly false. Thailand has a large energy generation overcapacity, many of its underutilized power plants can switch to fuel oil or diesel, and has the capacity to increase LNG imports to replace Myanmar gas.⁷
- 3) TotalEnergies argues that it does not want to "upend" daily life of the people of Myanmar, disregarding nation-wide demands from inside Myanmar. Indeed, this point is both ill-informed and neocolonialist. Most people in Myanmar have been without electricity for most of their lives. In 2016, 64% of the Myanmar population did not have access to electricity. A recent public survey found people overwhelmingly preferred electricity cuts to revenues reaching the junta; in other words, the idea of TotalEnergies funding prolonged military rule is extremely unpopular in Myanmar. This view is demonstrated by the current nation-wide protest movement of civilians refusing to pay their electricity bills.⁸
- 4) TotalEnergies has stated concern that its Myanmar staff would be subject to forced labor if they were to halt payments to the junta, while ignoring calls by these same staff to do just that.⁹ These staff base their calls on an understanding of the atrocities that a well-funded junta will commit against everyone in Myanmar, including them. Moreover, TotalEnergies' Myanmar staff and its partner, Myanma Oil and Gas Enterprise (MOGE), do not have the capacity to operate the Yadana pipeline without the ongoing international technical support of its international staff - that creates a situation where staff are at risk of persecution if they do not work to finance the junta. Fundamentally, why is TotalEnergies funding the junta if it presents such a serious threat to TotalEnergies's staff and the wider population? TotalEnergies's staff are unsafe as long as the Myanmar military continues to purchase arms and attack civilians with funds they received from the sales of gas and oil.

- 5) TotalEnergies' contracts do not require it to pay or facilitate the transfer of funds to accounts controlled by the illegitimate junta. In contrast to TotalEnergies' insistence that local law says it must pay taxes to the military junta, Myanmar law expressly forbids misappropriating public funds and payments to third parties that are impersonating public servants. TotalEnergies' joint venture partner MOGE, a state-owned enterprise (SOE), as well as its bank accounts are under junta control. The European Union, United States, United Kingdom and Canada have stated that SOEs fund the junta and military atrocities, and leading French and international trade unions have called for sanctions on MOGE, yet TotalEnergies's payments to MOGE continue.^{10 11 12}

- 6) TotalEnergies has sided with the junta, which the people of Myanmar overwhelmingly reject. Though it says that it cannot take a view, under international law, on who represents the government of Myanmar, TotalEnergies has shown its view by continuing payments to the illegal junta. As per its contractual agreement, TotalEnergies (Operator) is the representative of the Sellers, and in turn is a representative of MOGE.¹³ Its actions work to legitimize the military junta and will have a catastrophic humanitarian impact. TotalEnergies should acknowledge the recent resolution of the French Senate formally recognising the National Unity Government (NUG) as legitimate representatives of the democratic wishes of the people of Myanmar.¹⁴

- 7) A commercial takeover of TotalEnergies' investment by a Russian or Chinese company is not viable. Whilst public discussions focus on humanitarian dilemmas, there is private concern that TotalEnergies could be replaced by a Russian or Chinese company with even worse impacts on Myanmar's humanitarian situation. According to industry experts, even a fully cooperative takeover would take at least 12-18 months and incur substantial transaction costs. Furthermore, TotalEnergies' Yadana project will be depleted by around 2025, suggesting these costs could not be recovered. These issues and the risk that TotalEnergies may fail to cooperate in full, increasing costs and delays, makes a takeover commercially unviable.

- 8) TotalEnergies misleadingly suggests that it is powerless to take action because payments to the junta are paid by the gas buyer, Thai company PTT.¹⁵ In fact, PTT is contractually obliged to follow orders from TotalEnergies. PTT makes payments to junta-controlled accounts because TotalEnergies, as MOGE's representative, orders it to do so each month. TotalEnergies has even stated that some of these payments from PTT meet TotalEnergies' liabilities to MOGE. However, TotalEnergies has the power to direct PTT to transfer these payments into a protected account and PTT is obliged to comply with the contract.

Ultimately, despite the limited suspension of dividend payments by TotalEnergies and Chevron, 90% of the revenues from the Yadana gas project continue to flow to the junta and coup leader, Senior General Min Aung Hlaing, identified by the UN's Independent International Fact-Finding Mission on Myanmar (IIFMM) as a person to be investigated and prosecuted for crimes against humanity, including war crimes and genocide.^{16 17} The junta is the biggest security threat in Myanmar. Its atrocity crimes such as the recent attack on Thantlang town (Chin State) are now daily occurrences in Myanmar.^{18 19} We reiterate that TotalEnergies must end its complicity in atrocity crimes now, suspend all payments to the junta and place funds in a protected account until a democratically elected government is in place in Myanmar.

TotalEnergies has stated its commitment to respecting internationally recognized human rights and standards, in particular the OECD Guidelines for Multinational Enterprises and the UN Guiding Principles on Business and Human Rights, wherever it operates. Under the OECD Guidelines, TotalEnergies in relation to its business activities must avoid causing or contributing to adverse human rights impacts and address such impacts when they occur. Furthermore, TotalEnergies must seek ways to prevent or mitigate adverse human rights impacts that are directly linked to their business operations, products or services by a business relationship, even if they do not contribute to those impacts.²⁰ The placing of payments into escrow accounts and ensuring no financial flows go to MOGE and the junta would help prevent and mitigate the adverse human rights and impacts from your projects. TotalEnergies should also carry out human rights due diligence as appropriate to the nature and context of operations, which entails assessing the actual and potential human rights impacts of its activities, integrating and acting upon the findings, tracking responses, and communicating how these impacts are addressed.

In May 2021, the Vice-Chair of the UN Working Group on the issue of human rights and transnational corporations and other business enterprises stated that, because the risk of gross human rights violations had greatly increased since the illegal coup attempt, human rights due diligence by businesses should be rapidly and proportionately heightened. Yet, TotalEnergies has so far failed to prove it has conducted a proper assessment on whether its monthly payments to the junta are used to commit serious human rights violations.

In response to our letter, we request that TotalEnergies respond to the points above and also confirm:

- TotalEnergies' position on whether revenues collected by MOGE are under the control of the junta;
- TotalEnergies' assessment of the impacts of making monthly payments to accounts controlled by a junta;
- How TotalEnergies is resolving competing claims from the junta and NUG to be the Government of Myanmar, given that revenues are collected by MOGE, a government department;
- TotalEnergies' assessment of why Myanmar gas is vital to Thai energy security;
- Whether it is technically possible to reduce gas output to meet only Myanmar domestic needs;
